

LEARN HOW TO ACCERERATE YOUR BUSINESS EXPERTISE JUNE 7 from 9 -11.30 am

In a world that is fast changing, standing still is in fact moving backwards. So what is your plan for pushing ahead of the change in your market?

My first mentor always said that you are influenced most by the people you pull around you. This is especially true of the people you choose to work with. Collaboration with creative and expansive thinkers will accelerate your own learning and business skills faster than anything.

Deb Field - Director Business and Process Improvement, Sydney Trains and Founder of Facilitation Works.

Unfortunately working with client gatekeepers has the reverse effect and will teach you bad habits while eroding your trust. Putting a client focused team of professionals in place that will work with the same set of values, ethics and work ethos is something that happens by design, rarely by chance. Collaboration itself is a skill set worth learning and practicing.

Deb Fields has been facilitating change and collaboration for years at the highest level.

“The focus must be on the end result you are working towards and this is always about the client.” she says. Time at the start of the process to really understand the end result the client wants is part of the magic.

About Deb Field

Having worked in many complex organisations, Deb Field now consistently leads positive and significant change through the science and art-form of facilitation. Her skill in understanding the problem fully and using diversity to discover integrated client centric solutions is pure magic.

Limited Workshop places available and you can register here.

June 28 will be the final workshop in this Collaboration Series presented by Chris Murray, Director and Creator of Auto Guidance on Practicing Collaboration – Tools to support collaboration. Register here.

Event supporters

